PREFACE.

---

THE IPURINÁS.

THE tribe of Indians called Ipuriná, a cannibal tribe, inhabit only the River Purús, one of the largest affluents of the Amazon, on the right bank, from the district called Sipatiní (Indian name, Shibatirí ), in the Middle Purús, to beyond the River Acre (a corruption of Twákŷrý, its Indian and proper name), in the Upper Purús; an extent of some 400 miles; living on the banks (very rarely), and on the numerous lakes and tributaries (lat. 8° S.; long. 67° W., approx.).

They are one of the largest of the thirty-four or more tribes inhabiting the giant river, are warlike among themselves, but both distrustful of, and recoiling from, civilised people. In their habits they are very retiring, and of their own accord do not seek the advantages offered by, nor are they very desirous to have any dealing with, civilisation, evidently feeling far more at home when away from all strangers; for this, however, many of them have good reasons.

They are naturally indolent, and lounge during the greater part of their time in their hammocks, which they do not even take the trouble to learn to weave, but beg, or barter for them with the neighbouring tribes, and are in every respect, as regards ability and progress, far inferior to the Indians on the Tapajós and in British and Dutch Guianas. When, however, their isolated condition, during several centuries, without any incentive from without to ambition or to a higher life, is taken into consideration, it will be seen that they should largely be exonerated from the charge of indolence or indifference.

Being so widely scattered and so far apart from one another, their number cannot easily be ascertained; being also migratory, the task is doubly difficult; they may perhaps muster 2,000 or 3,000 altogether. The largest number I have ever seen together, living in the same hut, is about forty—men, women, and children. They have a very scanty number of guns, which they find difficult to obtain, but which they highly prize when they have them. They use the bow and arrow to shoot the various kinds of forest animals, as also fishes, for immediate sustenance only, for they are not at all provident. They plant an insignificant space with cassada, plantain, and banana, their principal food, and in addition to these, sustain life during a great part of the year with the variety of fruits which successively appear. Night or day, they constantly eat when they have food. Except a very few, they are always in puris naturalibus. On an average, they are taller than the aborigines of Tierra del Fuego, among whom I have lived for over three years; the tallest I have seen measuring about 5 feet 6 inches or 5 feet 7 inches.

It is only during recent years, since traders began to ascend the Upper Purús, with a view to collect the rubber-milk and manufacture india-rubber growing here and there on its banks, that the Ipurinás have peeped out of their seclusion; a few of them, when they choose, prepare a few pounds of india-rubber to barter with the traders for farinha, or native meal, some odd vestment, or a little of the most ordinary hardware, and ardent spirits, which latter have not yet aided them towards a higher level of morality; fortunately, owing to their natural reserve and taciturnity, the mischievous influence has up to now been experienced by only a minimum of the tribe.

I have been careful to enquire whether they knew anything of a supreme Deity, or whether they had any religion whatever; but I found that they knew nothing definitely of such a One. But there is among them a vague idea of the existence of a chaotic period in ages past, and also a tradition of a universal flood which destroyed their people on account of their wickedness; only one man and one woman saved themselves in a canoe; from these the tribe in due time multiplied. They believe in spirits, of which they have a large number, and in a great one whom they call Gu'ntjnýrý, and who dwells somewhere in the skies; but none of these, from what I know, are propitiously inclined towards them, but rather destructive to them. They, however, exhibit no particular dread for these supernaturals, as one would expect.

Some spirits are supposed to be perpetually roaming in the forests, especially at night, while others have their fixed habitations in the sky. Having lived two years constantly among and with them, quite 2,000 miles from the sea-coast, and in the interior of South America, and for fully six years in various parts of the Amazon valley, I have had much time to observe them and their manners.

No effort has as yet been made by Brazil to civilise this tribe; within my knowledge, a few years ago a monk was sent by Government to open a mission at the Middle Purús; he remained fourteen days in the vicinity of Labria, and then left, disgusted with the plague of pinns (a tiny fly, gen. Simulium?) and mosquitos, and the inconveniences necessarily concomitant on Purús life.

Though the difficulties and hardships which one must needs encounter in his endeavours to accomplish this end are many, through the unexplored state of the country and want of easy communication, the Ipurinás are susceptible of good impressions, are docile, and, as I know from some of those I have had under my special tuition, are capable of being both civilised and christianized. Four things are indispensable—able, willing men, money, time, perseverance. In a larger work which I am preparing, I hope to speak more in extenso on the geography, fauna, ethnography, etc., of the Amazon valley.

THE IPURINÁ LANGUAGE.

This language is spoken exclusively by the Indians of the Ipuriná tribe; only one or two strangers have within the last few years acquired a small stock of words and very few sentences. These Indians having hitherto lived secluded, their language has been confined to themselves, and I have not yet seen it in writing or heard of its being reduced to such, except by myself. I found it at first exceedingly difficult to learn; but much of this was owing to the glib manner of speaking prevalent among savages, as well as the variety of forms for one and the same thing; but being obliged to do so with a view to conversation and teaching, and having nothing to be guided by except the Indians themselves, who are the worst of teachers, I set to work and devised a plan which, as facility has been one of my objects all along, I believe will be found easy by any novice. I wrote as I heard the Indians speak, namely, phonetically, and in doing so, I purposely retained the Roman system, so that any new learner might not be compelled to spend time in acquiring a new variety of characters. None but those who have been similarly employed will be able to recognize the obstacles I must have met with, and therefore duly appreciate the following pages, and my efforts, without any aid, to catch the evading sounds of an uncultivated language with all its uncouthness.

The present notes, though insignificant in quantity, are the result of the closest attention and hardest study imaginable for nearly two years, and this volume is the fifth of the kind I have written. I am far from saying they are complete or unmemorable; with two or three more years of the course of study I have pursued, I could have made them larger and arranged them better; indeed, had it been merely a matter of acquiring new terms, I could have had thousands more of such; but uncertain of the future, I have worked hard to bring this book to its present state for the use of others who might succeed me; the contents, however, are genuine, and the pronunciation is correct. I can read any word or sentence with facility, and be understood by the Indians. The language is poor in terms, and this, as well as my limited knowledge of it, as will be seen in the rules below, which are also few, has been a great drawback to me in my endeavours to clearly explain myself to the Indians; taking, however, into consideration their circumscribed state of life, we see at once that their language is adequate to their wants. It is far more defective than the Lingoa Geral, or Tupí Guarani of South America, which is now so far blended with the Portuguese as not to deserve to be called a savage language.

It has been interesting to me in my studies to discover existing similarity of idioms in four Indian languages, viz., Lingoa Geral, Ipuriná, Catiána, and Fuegian or Yahgan, and I cannot but conclude that they, as well as numerous others I am unacquainted with, are only so many dialects of the aboriginal language of South America, which has evidently degenerated from its primitive purity.

I must here explain that the reason why Vocabulary Part I consists chiefly of verbs and sentences is, because verbs and their use in any language are always more difficult to acquire, consequently I have devoted more time to them. Other parts of speech, however, will be found copiously blended with them.

REMARKS.

No attempt having hitherto been made by anyone to reduce this language into anything like a system, it cannot be expected that the following notes, or the arrangement in the vocabulary, should be perfect, or that all its peculiarities and changes should be exhibited here. The following is merely an essay, but one founded on direct experience, and is only an aid to the discovery of many terms which I now know not, and the development of the language. Nor is it to be expected that a perfect systematic arrangement of the different heads and their contents could at once be attained. Under this head I point out only a few of the prominent features of the Ipuriná.

Uniformity is not observed by the Indians in pronunciation, and this necessarily so, seeing that they do not know letters and have no literature, e.g.:—

Chabéri, Chapýrý, to castigate.

The former is so pronounced by Indians of the Purús, the latter by those of another locality in the interior some four days' distant by canoe. Again,

Mýrýhý'nuýretu, Mýrýhý'nuýrýtý, beautiful; same as before.

These are pronounced nearly alike, but a new beginner is more likely than not to be puzzled.

Different forms are used to express the same thing; e.g.:—

Ingetanapanucú or Ichiacapéngari or Mapiyínapani or Ingnucapénga, it has become dark, or, it is night.

Ímimakýpe or Camáshirakibýbjýrý or Camáshirakibýscarite or Camý'mabýtýrý, it is difficult.

There are also words which, taken singly, express different things, but they are comparatively few ; e.g. :—

Anrirawatachi, to slap with hand, or strike with a stick.

The language abounds in an endless variety of very long words, e.g. :—

Umurungucáamputiniwa, to hop.

Shámýnuchírawatini, to cleave wood.

Kíkinanacabíratini, to stutter.

Mitáimýnakýrýcaçacútacari, big toe.

Inversion of sentences is very common ; indeed, the language throughout is notable for this ; e.g. :—

Cúne nimirutá, lit., not I know, i.e., I do not know.

Cun'imatari nútá, lit., not know I, i.e., I do not know.

Nútá muní picicá, me to you give, i.e., you give me.

Ishitímuni ucacháca, lit., the ground upon it fell, i.e., it fell upon the ground.

With but very few exceptions, there are no generic names for plants, animals, &c. ; consequently, in speaking of these, the individual name must be mentioned. By the term Shímaký, fishes generally are comprehended, yet not all.

Nomenclature derived from names is of common occurrence, e.g. :—

Mayakýnrý, the fat of a large red fish ; it is, however, the name of a man.

Makípacá, lit., dirty or unwashed ; is also the name of a man, from Kípawa, to wash.

Of numerals there are only three, viz. :—

Hántý, Ýpý', Itú, i.e., one, two, three or more, and anything beyond is Itúcanani, a lot or a large number.

In this instance there is a remarkable coincidence, both in the Lingoa Geral and the Fuegian language, which also do not count beyond three, e.g. :—

Lingoa Geral, Muyepé, Mocóiy, Moçapý'r, one, two, three. Fuegian, Ucwéla, Cumbíbi, Mútun,<sup>1</sup> one, two, three, and Yéla means any number beyond three.

Words according to exigencies are emphasized ; for this, certain particles and syllables are employed, e.g. :—

Atapíticara, it is we. Under the head Particles, further on, I will dwell more on this.

The rules of euphony are observed, e.g. :—Instead of saying Aicú-anwanwa, he is in the hut, one says Aicúan-ra-wánwa, the ra, placed between two hyphens, is the euphonic characteristic.

Transposition.—Nouns and adjectives are turned into verbs, and verbs into nouns. Under Verb I will speak more of this.

IPURINÁ GRAMMAR.

ORTHOGRAPHY.

KEY TO PRONUNCIATION.

The letters dispensable or not necessary are d, f, j, l, o, q, v, x, z.

The vowels are thus pronounced:—a = ā, aa = ah, ae = āē, ai = āī, au = āōō, ay = aya (in Spanish), aȳ (v. ū infra), e = ē, ee = ā, ei = ēī, i = ī, ii = ee, iu = īōō, iy = Iyo (Japanese), u = u in put, ua = ūōā, ue = ūōē, ui = ūōī, uu = ūō in poor, uy = uy in ennuyer (as nearly as possible), uŷ = ūōŷ (v. ū ū infra), y = y in you, ya = ya in yam, ye = ye in yell, yi = yī, yu = you, yŷ (v. ū ū infra), ūŷ (a prolongation of ū q.v., heard in the word Camŷjyr', a macaw). ūō = u in put.

The consonants retain their usual sounds throughout.

The following are apt to be mistaken:—g for k, h aspirated as if not, i for y and vice versā, p for b and vice versā, r for l, t for d, u for o, wa for ua and vice versā, tç for ç or c before e, i, y, ū.

R AND L.

Between r and l there is a sound peculiar to this language, often heard, and it is very noticeable in words like

Arí, yes.

Maripuá, a lake.

Tçuringa, to be alone or unemployed.

Hánrica, softly!

It is a sudden transition from r to l.

NASAL SOUND OF N.

Not a single letter in any word is left unpronounced as in English; as in phonography, everyone is heard.

The only exception is n when it precedes a consonant or is final, then it is nasal, e.g.:—

Carúngamakinii, to thunder, or, it thunders, pronounced că-rööng-gă-nă-kĭ-nă.

Upeén, a bird; pronounced ū-pěéng.

Besides this, n has another nasal hardly recognized when pronounced, and the detection of it is a good test of a quick ear; it is heard in such words as:—

Man-ú, a reddish fish.

Chinatarin-apuán, name of a lake.

When such words occur, I place a hyphen next to the n to mark the sound. Also n is nasal when it precedes y consonant.

y AND ŷ.

I have introduced two indispensable letters or signs to assist in imitating the Indians as nearly as possible in pronunciation. They are y and ŷ. The sound of the first is heard in sing, and is used commonly between two vowels, e.g.:—

Y'ya, wet.

Niyátacnte, I want to drink.

The second sounds like the German ü, but pronounced with a raising of the back of the tongue, as in the pronunciation of the German ich, so that the vowel is accompanied by a more or less guttural sound, and it is as difficult to pronounce as it is to describe. In the words, Uŷgh, ha! Y'wa, he; Yuŷkŷ, a fruit; the sound is very marked.

THE CEDILLA.

The cedilla ç, commonly used in French, I have also adopted, it precedes a, u, and follows t, and has always the sound of ss; in hiss, e.g.:—

Carucuwánachi, a wooden pin used across the septum.

Çutí, the source of a river or lake.

Yutçúrawata, to sew.

Tçuringa, unemployed.

THE USE OF S.

S for the most part is used with h, which it precedes, and is sounded like sh in shall, e.g.:—

Shínginiri, to blow.

Wákýshunga, at once!

Sometimes, though very rarely, it precedes c. In all other cases ç or c is substituted for s.

THE USE OF CH.

Ch has its equivalent in cheer, e.g.:—

Chupatá, a fruit.

Machúngamatari, to pineh.

COMBINATION OF CONSONANTS.

The only combination of consonants required are ch, sh, sc, tc, and they may be either at the beginning or middle of a word, but never at the end.

THE USE OF G.

G is always hard before any vowel as in get and give; before a consonant it is not used, e.g.:—

Géra, a toad.

Ningichi, beads.

THE ACUTE AND THE CIRCUMFLEX ACCENTS.

I use two accents, the acute and the circumflex; the former to point out the accented syllable, as Uhy', an eye; the latter is found only over y, to show its peculiar sound, as in Y'wa, he.

The general tendency of this language is to accentuate the ultimate syllable; but in long words sometimes there are two or three accents. Owing, however, to the yet barbarous state of the language, to locality, or mere individual caprice and rambling mode of speaking, there is much irregularity both in pronunciation and accentuation.

THE APOSTROPHE.

I use the apostrophe to mark the omission of a vowel for the sake of euphony, e.g.:—

Pít'ankéri, thy son; instead of Pítahankéri.

Atabúric'acútiniwa, to whistle through the hand; instead of Atabúricawaciútiniwa, Wácu being the word for hand.

---

ETYMOLOGY WITH EXAMPLES.

ARTICLE.

Properly speaking, there is none. It is included in the word or sentence, according as either of these is employed, e.g.:—

Áanta nicicái, I give you the canoe.

The the is included in Áanta.

Aicú nicáma, I am making a hut.

The a is included in Aicú, and the literal meaning of the two sentences is, I give you canoe, I make hut.

---

NOUN.

The noun is indeclinable. To distinguish the cases, certain particles are, in some instances, added, while the genitive is denoted by position thus:—

Nom., Cángjytý, an Ipuriná.

Gen., Cangjyt'úanta, the Ipuriná's (canoe); or, Cungjytý túichi, the Ipuriná's.

Dat., Cángjyt' (áanta)muní, to the Ipuriná('s canoe).

Acc., Cángjyt' (áanta), the Ipuriná('s canoe).

Voc., Cángjytý! Ipuriná.

Abl., Cángjytý muní, from the Ipuriná.

In the ablative case, however, it is necessary to use a verb, the simple form does not suffice, thus:—

Cángjytj muni pápa aanké, go and fetch the stick from the Ipuriná.

A collective form is made by the addition of niri to the names of irrational creatures and inanimate things, and wacuri or wacurú to those of men and women, the former being masculine and the latter feminine, thus:—

Ký'kýwacuri, men.

Cítuwacurú, women.

By adding certain terminations to verbs, nouns are formed, e.g.:—

Cashibúca, to wipe.

Cashibucamánetiniwa, what one wipes oneself with, i.e., a towel.

Any noun may be turned into the possessive case by prefixing N or Nuta, P or Pita, W or Wa, e.g.:—

Nawini or Nutuwini, Pawini or Pitawini, Awini or Wawini, my, thy, his hut; from Awini, a wigwam or hut. V. Remarks under Pronoun.

Except in the cases of man and irrational animals, there is no distinction of genders. V. Particles.

Compound words are readily formed, e.g.:—

Shámýnaký, a gun; Upaní, powder; Shámýnakýpaní, gun-powder.

Aunta, canoe; Puký, prow; Aantapukýta, canoe-prow.

ADJECTIVE.

The adjective is not always pure, more often it is a modification of a noun, a verb, or an adverb; it is, however, indeclinable, and follows the noun it qualifies, thus:—

Kýký'ntunu, a tall man, from Kýký', man, and Intanu, tall, also a long way.

Cituáshanký, a short or little woman, from Cítu, a woman, and Wáshanký, small.

If the adjective forms the predicate of the verb Awapíca = to be, expressed or understood, it may precede or follow the personal pronoun with or without the verb expressed, thus:—

Hanréca nawapíca nútá, or simply Nútá hanréca, I am good or well.

Amíyanari nútá or Nút'amíyanuri, I am sick.

THE COMPARATIVE.

The comparative is formed by the use of támata or támatachi,
e.g. :—

Mitá, large.

Mitatámata, larger than.

Wáshankj, small.

Wáshankjútámata, smaller than.

But, instead of the above comparative sign, one more often hears the following :—

Píta itú nity'rýta, I love thee very much; Píta wáshankj nity'rýta, I love thee very little, equivalent to I love thee more, but thee I love less, addressing two different persons.

It should here be noticed that no conjunction is used to join the subordinate to the principal sentence, and the Ipuriná simply says :—

Píta itú nity'rýta, píta wáshankj nity'rýta, I love thee very much, I love thee little.

THE NUMERALS.

The numerals are only three :—

Hántj, one; Ypý', two; Itú, three or many. Ypý' also means a few. For any larger number, Itúcanani or Mýrýkýnýtj' is equivalent.

Adjectives made Verbs.

Adjectives, by the addition of certain verbal characteristics, are made verbs, e.g. :—

Tçupý' or Catçupý', white.

Tçúpý'tiniri, to whiten or clean to whiteness. V. Verb.

PRONOUN.

The personal pronouns are :—Núta, I; Píta, thou; Y'wa, he or she; Áta, we; Píta, ye or you; Y'wa or Unguraniri, they.

Singular.

Nom., Núta or Núca, I.

Dat. Abl., Núta muni', to me.

Ac., Núta or Nucú, me.

Nom. Ac., Píta, thou, thee.

Dat. Abl., Píta muni', to, from, thee.

<sup>1</sup> All these forms must be used in composition.

Nom., Y'wa, he, she.

Gen., Y'wa or Itúi, of him, of her.

Dat. Abl., Y'wamuni, to him, to her, from him, from her.

Ac., Y'wa, him, her.

Plural.

Nom., Áta, we.

Gen., A<sup>1</sup> or Áta, of us.

Dat. Abl., Atumuni, to us.

Ac., Wacú, us.

Nom., Píta, you.

Dat. Abl., Píta muni or Ínta, to, from, you.

Ac., Píta or Ínta,

Nom., Üngura niri, they m., nirú, f.

Gen., Üngura or Y'wantúi, of them.

Dat. Abl., Ünguraniri muni or Ínua, to or from them.

Ac., Ínua, them.

The Possessives.

The possessives are :—Nitúi or Nitúichi, mine ; Pitúi or Pitúichi, thine ; Itúi or Túichi, his (singular). Nitúi niri, mine ; Pitúi niri, thine ; Túichiniri, his or theirs (plural).

The Demonstratives.

The demonstratives are :—Íya, this ; Y'wa, that.

The Interrogatives.

The interrogatives are :—Kéripara, who ? Nikéri, which ? Kéri or Kéripara, or Keritíngane, what ? e.g. :—

Kéripara, who, or what person is it ?

Nikéri cítu, what woman ?

Keritimingane pimashiríca, what are you sewing ?

The Relatives.

There is no relative pronoun, but by using the affixes ký'tý or ký'tu to the verb, the relative is included, thus :—

Cíca, to give ; Niciký'tý, what I gave.

N.B.—There is danger of not recognising a word pronounced by the Indians through their constantly prefixing part of the personal pronoun to nouns and verbs, and seldom giving a word in its primitive form. Of this, much will be seen in the verbs. V. Noun.

VERB.

Verbs are, on the whole, very regular in the ending of their roots. The infinitive endings generally are, ca, kicu, kini, kiniri, ta, ticu, tini, tiniri. But these finals are not strictly used to characterise the infinitive; they are often heard in the inflection, or in the tenses of the verb. A complete conjugation must not be looked for here; the Ipuriná verb is exceedingly deficient in moods and tenses, and oftener the same form is used either with the addition or omission of certain indispensable suffixes or expletives to signify the mood or tense, or with adverbs of time.

The persons are distinguished by pronominal prefixes, and it is well to remark that the Ipurinás very seldom, in the cases of nouns and verbs especially, give a word in its simple form, but prefix either part or the whole of the personal pronoun. This was at first to me a stumbling-block. Take, for instance, the following:—Aamýna, a tree; but if you point to a branch or bough and ask an Ipuriná, What do you call that? he will not say Branch, but Its branch. Thus Icatý' instead of Catý', the I being the pronominal prefix.

In like manner with the verb, instead of saying Tý'rýta, to love, he will say Itý'rýta, which means to love, he loves, they love; the I being the pronominal prefix. Hence the difficulties which must necessarily be met with by a beginner is evident.

We have the verb Tý'rýta or Tý'rýtiniri, to love.

THE INDICATIVE MOOD.

Present Tense.

Singular.	Plural.
Nitý'rýta , I love.	Atý'rýta , we love.
Pitý'rýta , thou lovest.	Intý'rýta or Pitý'rýta , ye love.
Itý'rýta or Uty'rýta , he loves.	Inuatý'rýta or Itý'rýta , they love.
Dual.— Itý'rýtacakini , they two love.

Progressive Form.

There is a progressive form, characterised by affixing áwacanani or áwacananiya, e.g.:—

Nitý'rýtiniáwacananiyapíca, I am loving thee, or, I love thee constantly.

The other persons are, hence, easily formed. Add the characteristic endings to the infinitive, as shown below.

Itimpucutúwacananiyapíca, he is promenading.

Inuayúciringatçátawacananiyapíca, they are stringing.

Niyungárawacanani, I am writing.

The Imperfect.

The imperfect tense is formed by the use of cáwaký, which, in this instance, means when, e.g.:—

Ký'ta aányata çáwaký, imbarín kípawa, when we were hunting yesterday, it came on to rain, where Ký'ta, yesterday, is a necessary complement of the past tense.

The Perfect Definite.

The perfect definite is formed by adding penga to the infinitive, thus :—

Nicicapénga, I gave, or have given; or simply pe, thus :—
Uímpe, he has come.

When, however, emphasis is desired, other particles are added instead of the above, e.g. :—

Nicicapíticara, I have given. V. Particles.

The Pluperfect.

The pluperfect is formed by the use of çáwaký and an adverb of past time with the verb as in the imperfect tense, and there is indeed hardly any difference, except that the verb or verbs, or what had preceded in conversation, determines what is to be understood, thus :—

Aámýna muní kí'tatý nícaninga çáwaký, nétamaamputare áancatý itúcanani; when I had climbed the tree, the other day, I saw the tops of numerous trees.

The Definite Future.

By the addition of panicá to the infinitive, the definite future is formed, thus :—

Nacárip' açapanicá? when shall we go ?

Catánawac' ýnapanicá, a few days hence he will come.

There is, however, this suffix, pama, which, added instead of the above, expresses forcibly a determination, e.g. :—

Wíancatçapamanú! it will bite me !

Nishánuýnakýcatapamai! or else I'll shoot you ! or, I will shoot you !

The Future Perfect.

The future perfect is formed by using upuçu before the phrase or sentence, thus :—

Upuçú ipucacátucu pucacarú, when it has boiled, lift it down.

Upuçú nípcure áníca çáwaký, piyútçurawata, you may sew when we shall have eaten.

THE POTENTIAL OR SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD.

The potential or subjunctive is formed by the use of the particles tingane, ricu, çawaky, e.g. :—

Mapúntça pícicanú, niyútçaratíngane, give me some thread that I may sew.

Upuçú çáwakj pímjna, ninicaricu, when it is finished, bring it that I may eat.

Kéripa pímjna nu, nícica çáwakjí? what will you bring me, if I give it to you?

THE IMPERATIVE MOOD.

The imperative mood is pretty regular, inasmuch as for the greatest part the indicative form is used for it, e.g. :—

Pícicanu hántj! give me one! from Cíca, to give.

Paníca j'wa muní! carry it thither! from Aníca.

Shámjna picáma! make fire! from Cáma.

Am'akípawa, let's go to bathe ourselves; from Kípawa, to bathe; and Ámu, come thou.

Pimj'n'apuca! bring it! from Mýna.

Picipéngä! begone! from Ca, to go.

Pimapé! go sleep! from Macá, to sleep.

Am'ambýrj'yata, let's cross the stream; from Imbýrj'yata.

The Reflective Form.

As to the reflective form, some verbs contain it in themselves and need no external aid, while others are deficient without the reflective pronoun Iwica, e.g. :—

Amakípawa, come, let's go and bathe ourselves, where Iwica is understood.

Iwica anritácarica nu, I struck myself.

Iwica anritacáricawa, he has struck himself.

Iwic'iyúrtuwa, he speared himself.

Interrogative and Negative Forms.

In regard to the interrogative and the negative forms, the following should be observed: Áta and Négani characterise the interrogative, thus :—

At'upuçupéngä? is it already finished?

Áta cíne cituwacurú pícica mangáchi? are you not going to give any clothes to the women?

Áta nútá cáta piçá? will you go with me?

Négani or Anégani cúpitian náshitari? shall I cook it in the saucepan?

Anégani imakjnj' iyúrtarité? is it true that they have speared one another?

Icari or yucari affixed to the infinitive shows the negative form, thus :—

Cun'awakicáicari, there is no more.

Cíne shímakj iperucayúcari, he has caught no fish.

These affixes, however, are not always necessary, for Cíne, no or not, does nearly as well, thus:—

Cíne nicicái, I won't give you.

Cún'ápuca panicú, he has not yet arrived.

VERBS MADE NEGATIVE.

Besides the above forms, numerous verbs are easily made negative by prefixing m to the affirmative, e.g.:—

Makíritiniri, not to call; from Akíritiniri, to call.

Nimakéamacutácani', I did not hear thee; from Kéamacuta, to hear.

Nimayútçarawítacani, I have not sewed; from Yútçarawata, to sew.

Nimétamatácaniri, I did not see; from Éta, to see.

USE OF THE DUAL FORM.

A few examples illustrating the use of the dual form:—

Apýçatácacini, they follow close together.

Maanrátacakiniwá, to hug.

Cícawacutácacini, to kiss hand, from Cíca, to give; Wácu, hand, and the dual affix tácacini.

Cacanapýrýtácacaginiwá, to fight at close quarters.

Macipututácacakinina, to kiss.

Ichitácacakinina, to quarrel.

Umanatácacana, they spurn each other.

Ýpýtékitácacini, to approach, i.e., two canoes from opposite directions.

Here it is seen that tacaca or tacagini is the characteristic of the dual form.

REMARKS ON THE VERB.

Besides the forms found in the vocabulary of verbs, verbs have several other forms of less importance. Verbs always end in vowels; this may also be said of the language at large, that it ends in vowels. As to impersonals, numerous examples will be found under the auxiliary to be in the vocabulary.

The letter i affixed to verbs and to some other parts of speech represents the personal pronoun thou or you, the accusative thee, and the dative to thee, in verbs only; and the personal thou or you in the parts of speech it is used with, thus:—

Piyúciringatçataí píta, thou art stringing.

Here the simple form of the verb is Yucíringatçata, and the prefix pi, the final i, and the word píta, are all representatives of the pronoun thou, and this is the form generally employed when i, as I said before, supersedes thou or you.

Níyaráitai, I strike thee ; simple form, Arita or Anrita.
Nicicái, I give to thee ; simple form, Cíca.
Ký'kýjí pítu, thou art a man ; from Ký'kýj, a man.
Púncamaraí pítá, thou art red ; from Púncamara, red.

From the above examples it is seen that not only is i thus used, but that the auxiliary to be is also included.

The proper use of the verb, on all occasions, is not strictly observed ; the Indians, when in the heat of their conversations, use a superabundance of interjections which effectually supplant the verb. The verb oftentimes, especially when compounded, deviates from its infinitive form, e.g. :—

Ichitúini, to bend (intransitive).
Ichitúaampuritini, the tree-branch bends.
Uchitúantçupatini, the paper bends.
Capatákiniri, to double.
Nucatçupátaca, I double paper ; where Ántçupa, a leaf, paper, is the simple form.

The verb, for the greater part, is perfect, including in itself different actions, or an action in its different aspects as is commonly the case in Greek. Such verb is mostly of a polysynthetic character, e.g. :—

Nicúçacatçaturumatiniú, I draw the cord tight round your belly ; thus analysed :—Ní, pronominal prefix ; cúçaca, to draw tight ; tça, cord ; túruma, belly ; tini, characteristic affix of the verb ; i, pronominal affix, signifying thy or your, referring to the belly.

Apáantiniri, to go for water.
Caçarámbucayángutiniri, to comb the hair backwards, where Yángu or Yanguchí, hair, is the simple form.
Kýçabanáintiniri, to dig for the interment of the dead.
Umbirikéentiniri, to chase or follow hard after a canoe.
Icashikicanuniyángutiniwa, to dislevel.

From the variations to which verbs often are subject, one sometimes is at a loss to conjecture the simple forms when in their inflections they are uttered, thus :—

Apa, to go for.
Wúampa, he goes for.
Ucú, to throw away or pull out ; Aínca, we pull out.
Awacacaréwata, to bring forth ; Wáanwucacapénga, she has brought forth.

Though, unless the name or subject of the verb be expressed, it is difficult to know the gender of the subject, by adding certain particles to the verb, the genders can be distinguished, thus :—

Wenreyángutari, to comb hair ; Wenreyángutaru, idem.

Here both forms express the same thing, but the finals ri and ru show that the first is by a man and the second by a woman. And here one cannot but notice the very striking similarity there exists between this so-called barbarous language and the ancient and cultivated Hebrew, which also has a distinctive verbal form for the feminine gender.

Whilst treating of this, I may mention that this order is not confined to verbs, but may also be found in other parts of speech, especially in interjections, e.g. :—

Wérapanicunútate!	get out of my way!	man to man.
Wérapanicurú!	„ „ „	woman to woman.
Wérapanicurú!	„ „ „	man to woman.
Wérapanicuri!	„ „ „	woman to man.

It is only the finals te, ri, ru, which afford a clue to the genders.

Reciprocal transpositions occur in nouns, but in adjectives and verbs particularly, e.g. :—

Apý'rýngamánetiniwa, lit. that wherewith we rub our bodies, i.e., soap, from A, we, Pý'rýnca or Pý'rýnga, to rub, Máne, body, tiniwa affix.

Ingetapéngari; it has already become night, where Ingetú is night, and the affix pengari so used, supplies the place of the verb.

Imamatíniri, to become or to have made black; from Púmama, black.

ADVERB.

There are good many adverbs; they and adjectives are in some cases interchangeable. Adverbs are sometimes not used singly, but are included in the verbs they qualify; or the verb is so constructed as to include its qualifying adverb, e.g. :—

Cáyamacanántiniwa, to walk droopingly.

Uyaricamánatawa, to walk backwards.

The adverb for the most part precedes the verb.

No difficulty is presented in the use of the adverb, therefore it is not necessary to dilate upon it.

PREPOSITION.

Postposition, rather than preposition, is what this part of speech in this language may properly be called, and the same may be said of many Indian languages, for the words used as prepositions do not precede their nouns or pronouns, but follow them. Of the three Indian languages I know I give the following instances:—

Lingoa Geral	Ce-r-oca-ký'tý	to my house.
Ipuriná	Nawini' muni'	" "
Yahgan (Tierra del Fuego)	Hšucqtupí<sup>1</sup>	" "

Where the finals kýtj, muni, tupj, are the postpositions, and the literal meaning in each case is :—

My house to or towards.

The postposition is not always used in construction ; like the adverb, it is often included in the verb ; hence the reason of so few in the language, e.g.:—

Cángýtj nicicapénga or Cángýtjmuni nicicapénga, I have already given (it or them) to the Ipuriná.

In the first instance there is not the postposition muni; but either form does quite as well.

The postposition, like the adverb, presents no difficulty in construction, and those I have acquired will be found under the head Preposition, in the Vocabulary.

CONJUNCTION.

There is hardly such ; the language is of such a nature that it can afford to dispense with it, e.g.:—

Kéripa'apuca? Camayari, íya Cawapú, íya Yacamá, &c.

Who have arrived ? Camayari, and Cawapú, and Yacamá ; and so a long list of names may be made.

Piwarabírata nu wai wíampuca cágwaký, tell me if he comes or when he comes, where cágwaký=if.

INTERJECTION.

There is a large number of interjections ; indeed there are very few sentences pronounced without one or more, and such is their common usage that they often supersede verbs, especially in the heat of some narrative. There is, however, this peculiarity in the greatest number of them, that they bear, in their forms, the distinctive gender of the person addressed.

Wachacaté !	be quick !	to a man.
Wachacarú !	” ”	to a woman.
Ah né !	hoa, I say !	a man to a woman.
Ah yú !	” ”	woman to woman.
Cítúamarú !	” ”	man to woman.
Ichú !	” ”	woman to man.

PARTICLES, INCLUDING PREFIXES AND AFFIXES.

Of these there are different kinds, all commonly used, but at the option of the speaker, especially when he chooses to give emphasis to what he has said. They are of the greatest use in conversation. But the truth is, they are sometimes used from mere caprice, placed where there is no real need for them; and through this I have often been perplexed, being unable to distinguish which form was right and which wrong, while, in reality, all the forms were right, but only they were so used according to the locality the speaker was from, e.g.:—

Amu wai piíntipancaicha, come and sit here.

Ámu wai pitupángá

Áantçukecha niwarúngacatáicha, I hang upon a pole, where cha and taicha are affixes.

Aantçuke niwarúnga

---

Prefixes.

Those I know are m, ma, me, mi, mu, mŷ, for the most part prefixed to the verb, which then becomes negative; and to adjectives, which undergo the same change, e.g.:—

Mayíruwanta, not to travel or to fish on the water; from Yúruwanta, to travel on the water.

Máyatíniri, not to travel in the wood; from Áyatíniri, to travel or hunt in the wood.

Mántcýbýrý, not to jest; from Úntcýbýrý, to jest.

Máanre, (instead of Mahánre) improper; from Hánre, proper or well.

Máantacatý, immortal; from Áantacatý, mortal.

Naránký, preceded by Cíne, meaning not, stands also as a prefix; but it differs from the above in that, instead of making the verb negative it makes it affirmative, e.g.:—

Cíne naránký patacayúcarite, it is warm, from Ípataca or Cípataca, warm.

Cíne naránký ý'mamakýpý yúcari, it is dark, from Ímama, black.

Cíne naránký chícurite ímari, it smells agreeable.

---

Affixes.

Affirmative affixes.—Chicara, pitipéngara and pitícará, besides affirming, show that particular stress is laid on the words with which they are used, thus:—

Pítá chícará, it is you.

Wúantacapitipéngari, she is dead.

Nuwarubýratapiticára, I have told or informed (him or her).

Tingane or tinganama affixed to the verb gives it a potential or subjunctive turn, thus:—

Nimangáchi niyútçaratínganama, that I may sew my clothes.

Péngari or péngaru, the first to distinguish the masculine, the second, the feminine gender, signifies already, thus:—

Nucapéngari, I have already thrown (it away).

Uyúciringatçatapéngaru, she has already strung them.

Kýtý, kýtu, or kini, added to the verb turns it into a participle-noun, e.g. :—

Nicikýtý, what I have given ; from Cíca, to give.

Acakýtý, what we made ; from Címa, to make.

Iníkini, what he eats, or that out of which he eats ; from Níca, to eat.

Cha or icha.—The use of these characterises moral quality and locality, and adds also emphasis, e.g. :—

Yárascaichá, thou art lazy, where Yára is an adjective but used as a verb.

Pitupángacha, sit thou down.

Niwarúngaicha, I hang or suspend.

Ímenunganibéngaru núicha, I am an orphan.

In all these instances the final cha in some localities is very well dispensed with, and I may add that it is not understood by some Indians.

Negative affixes.—They are icari, or yucari, and ni, e.g. :—

Cúne niperucayúcari shímaký, I've caught no fish.

Cúne pumamayúcuri, it is not black.

Cun'ipíngarini, he is not afraid.

Affixes distinctive of the plural number. Wacuri, or wacuru, the former for the masculine gender, the latter for the feminine, having, however, reference to rational creatures, thus :—

Kýkýwacuri, men.

Cítuwacuru, women.

Nútankeriwacuri, my sons.

Nútankeruwacurú, my daughters.

Niri is also an affix of the plural number ; it is used both in reference to rational and irrational creatures, and to inanimate things :—

Cángjytjniri, Ipurinás.

Kíamaniri, tapirs, also cattle.

Aamýnaniri, trees.

Affixes distinctive of the sexes : Te, ri, mu, ru, f.—As there are no personal pronouns to aid in the distinction of genders, these affixes, as well as the numerous particles preceding, are of the greatest use in the language. See Interjection, a few pages above, where these affixes are exemplified in extenso.

Pama is characteristic of the future, and expresses a determination as :—

Nishámýnakícatapamaí ! I'll shoot you !

Waancatçatapamanú ! it will bite me !

Awacananiyapica has reference to the progressive form, thus :—

Niyungúrawacananiyapicá, I am writing.

Euphonic characteristics.

Besides the prefixes and affixes above mentioned, there are certain letters and syllables used in the middle of words and sentences for the sake of euphony. They are: r, ra, ru, t, int, e.g. :—

Aicuan-r-awánwa, it is in the hut, from Aicú, hut, and Awapíca, to remain or to be.

Ký'ký-ra-núta, I am a man.

Angý-t-úancarari, it is within.

At'-int-áyatínima, we travelled in the wood.

The letters and syllables between hyphens are the euphonic characteristics.

The above list of words and phrases I acquired verbally from the Pamaris themselves; I have not yet seen the language reduced to writing anywhere else.

THE DECALOGUE IN THE IPURINÁ LANGUAGE.

Deus ipániyatatakýtý, i.e., What God has commanded.

1. Deus ipániyatini áta muní, íyatuc' icha : Hántýcaru nútá nu-yaampakýtacari Deus nawapýca ; cun' apánakýný deus pikéamacuta.

1. God has commanded us, thus He has said: Only Myself am Commander and God; thou shalt not obey another god.

2. Cúne papayáunkini nu, cúne hántý deus pipapíngini ; nut' ámaputunichi, nuta náyanamachi hántý deus pipapínga çáwaký ; nipániyatatakýtí pikéamacuta çáwaký, ingýnýca nutáratai wácha, áwapýtýpuri itúcanani nitáratai.

2. Thou shalt not image Me, thou shalt not bow down to another god; I am jealous, and shall be angry if thou do; but if thou obey what I have commanded thee, I will love thee now and hereafter.

3. Cúne nútá púntcýpe pítá ; púntcýpe çáwaký nu, awapýtý-puricu nútá náyanamachi.

3. Thou shalt not mimic Me, if thou do, I shall be very angry.

4. Pishníkiniiri Domingo.<sup>1</sup> Cúne páyatapé Domingo çáwaký, pítankeriwacuri pítankeruwacuru, cíne pipániyatapé. Hántýcaru nútacamaru ítanushiti, ishítishiti, íntýbakýniri, wýnýniri, ípuaniri, íkýnýca seis húntý, Domingo nuyaampakítini, nítýrýta Domingo.

4. Remember the Lord's Day. Thou shalt not work on the Lord's Day, neither shalt thou command thy sons and thy daughters to do any work. Only Myself have made heaven and earth, the forests, the rivers, the lakes, and everything in six days, but on the Lord's Day I rested from labour, therefore I love the Lord's Day.

5. Cúne pimakéamacútacani páty, nútú ; pikéamacutaca çáwaký páty nátu muní, ishítishiti páwacananýyapítipuri.

5. Disobey not thy father or thy mother; if thou obey them, thou shalt live long on the earth.

6. Cúne Cángýtý, Imbarániri, apánakýnýniri, cíne pucapé.

6. Thou shalt not kill other Ipurinás or strangers.

<sup>1</sup> I explained to the Indians about the original Day of Rest, viz., Saturday, as also the events of the Resurrection Morning. As, however, the civilised people round about them more or less formally observe Sunday, I was obliged to use the word Domingo.

7. Cúne picapiténgeñiniri hantý'ntaniru.
 7. Thou shalt not seduce another's wife.
8. Cúne makýný'ca túichiniri cúne piyúmatapé.
 8. Thou shalt not steal another's property.

9. Cúne panirachírana pichapáwa.
 9. Thou shalt not tell an untruth.

10. Cúne hántý awíni, cúne piyámutapé, íntaniru, hankériwacuri, hankéreruwacurú, túichiniri, cúne piyámutape.
 10. Thou shalt not covet another's hut, thou shalt not covet his wife, his sons, his daughters, or anything that is his.

TRANSLATION.

What our Elder Brother Jesus has told us to say to our Father God.

Our Father God,/ who art above in heaven;/ make good our hearts, that we may love Thee./ Call (to Thyself all men) the inhabitants of the world. then adopt them and be a Father to them./ Give us and all men good hearts,/ that we may obey what <sup>1</sup> The sloping lines between words indicate the divisions and the equivalents in the two languages, thus : Amakýný'ca Pátý Deus = Our Father God, and so on.

Thou hast commanded,/ even as those good spirits do, which are with Thee in heaven./ Cause it always to rain,/ that the corn, cassada, plantain, and other plants may grow, that so we may eat./ Be not angry with us, as we are not with others./ Do not allow Satan, the evil spirit, to enter our hearts, and so teach us evil;/ (but) take care of us always;/ (for) all that is above, and all the earth, is Thine./ Thou art powerful,/ generous,/ and very good always. Amen.
